The Chronicles of Online Surveys for Cash

A survey site shouldn't ask for much more than your name, address, and email address. If they are asking you for personal information, such as saying that they will transfer funds to your bank if you give them your account and routing number, back out of the site. There is no reason for people to need more than the bare minimum of information. Of course, they'll ask you things like how much money you make if you want to have a better chance at qualifying, but you can also ignore these things and just deal with getting fewer surveys.

The Rise of Online Surveys for cash

Remember that people put in traps within surveys so that if you're just clicking through without reading you will fail the survey. For instance, in some part of the instructions they may ask you to select a certain thing from a list and if you don't, they will boot you out of the survey. Another thing to avoid is trying to go far too fast. Even if you think you know what to do to answer each question, make an effort to read over each page anyways. Some companies will tell you how long you have to spend on the survey, but in general, you want to, at least, read the content.

Amazon gift cards may be what you get from a survey site, and you may want to trade them for money. That's okay, you can find gift card exchanges or make a post somewhere online where you trade someone their PayPal money for a gift card they can use for a slightly reduced rate. Of course, you can avoid all of this if you make sure not to work with a company that only pays in gift cards.

Be wary of the websites that have you collect points that you can trade in later to get things like gifts. For instance, some websites have you collect fake currency that basically is like a few cents per 1 unit, and then you can trade it all in later after hours of work to get around 5 dollars' worth of merchandise. You should calculate what your time is worth per website despite how they calculate your wages. If you're making far less than minimum wage, you're better off finding a job in fast food or something similar.

Figuring out what you can about online surveys for cash will let you really get to know what your options are. There is no reason to do random surveys that may or may not pay you. Get with companies that give you a good amount of well-paying surveys and start supplementing your income.
